Compliancy Announces ICM Support for Local Languages for International Markets

Cary, North Carolina February 22, 2005 - To support the growing international demand for ICM, Compliancy has announced plans to support localization of languages. This decision precipitated from the large international demand for the product during the pre-release period.

"Our Sales partner Ultimus, has offices in 12 countries and we were a little surprised at the response to ICM internationally", says Jack Tackett of Compliancy. "We have Proof of Concepts, evaluations and other sales activities on every major continent so it became clear early on that we were going to have to support localization".

Support for localization is slated for an ICM release in Q205. This will allow the product to be translated in to most major languages to support the international demand.
